INTRODUCTION

Enclosure was the process by which land farmed in common was divided into enclosed fields. This land might be open arable fields, common pasture or moorland, or open meadowland where grass was preserved for the hay crop. This process had been taking place from earliest times – indeed some areas were farmed in small fields from their first colonisation – but it is from the mid-18th century onwards that most of the documentation survives, when enclosure by Act of Parliament became standard practice.

With rising land values and improved farming techniques, by the mid-18th century few farmers or landowners wished to retain substantial areas of common or open field. Instead, where residual areas of unenclosed land remained, it became customary for owners to petition Parliament for an Act to enable the lands to be enclosed. Having obtained the local Act of Parliament, the basic purpose of the award was to divide up the unenclosed areas among those landowners who could claim an interest in these specific areas of land. Independent surveyors were appointed to act as Inclosure Commissioners to carry out the process, by hearing the claims of everyone claiming an interest in the unenclosed lands – from the lord of the manor down to the smallest cottager claiming right of common of some sort – and converting these claims into allotments of land in the commons in proportion to their previous rights.

As well as being important sources for local, agricultural and economic history, enclosure awards and maps remain important legal documents with continuing implications in particular for rights of way. As the later awards were generally sanctioned by Act of Parliament, the decisions taken by the enclosure commissioners on the route, width and status of carriage roads, bridle roads and footpaths remain valid to this day provided they have not been amended by a subsequent legal instrument.

In general terms, Staffordshire was not a county where large areas of open field, meadow or common pasture remained unenclosed at the start of the era of parliamentary enclosure. Private enclosure agreed between landowners had already accounted for most open fields and meadows long before, and in most parishes only small residual areas of common remained to be dealt with by parliamentary enclosure. There were some exceptions, for example parishes in the Trent Valley such as Alrewas, Whittington and Burton-on-Trent showed many of the characteristics of places in more easterly counties with larger open fields. Other exceptions to this general rule were the two substantial woodland areas of Needwood Forest and Cannock Chase, both the subjects of very substantial parliamentary enclosures. The latter had remained unenclosed until the second half of the 19th century, and the enclosure is connected to the intended expansion of housing, but with the reservation of rights over mineral extraction and game, with the result that this particular award is still cited in title deeds of houses in the affected areas.

Holdings of Acts, maps and awards

Copies survive for the vast majority of Parliamentary enclosures known to have taken place in Staffordshire, which are available at Staffordshire Record Office. The main collection are the copies deposited with the Clerk of the Peace which form part of the Quarter Sessions collection. Others may have come from other sources such as solicitors' offices, estate archives, or individual parishes. One exception is the first and principal parliamentary enclosure award for Upper or Over Biddulph in 1840 of which there is no local copy nor a copy enrolled centrally in the House of Lords. Newcastle-under-Lyme and Colton are other areas without surviving maps or awards, although there may be related documents, some held elsewhere. There are also some maps and awards held at The National Archives which were copied to fill gaps. Such copies are included in this Guide except where other originals have since been deposited.

There may be two contemporary copies of some maps and awards, a copy that was kept locally in addition to the copy deposited with the Clerk of the Peace. This seems to have been common the Moorlands areas, where most maps were drawn by the local surveyor Heaton, but it occurs for other areas as well. These second copies are not necessarily identical and may be at a different scale.

The enclosure process is reflected in the standard format of the enclosure awards: the granting of an Act of Parliament is recited; the commissioners are named; the lord of the manor is named and a brief description of the land being enclosed is given. This preamble is followed by a list of the allotments. The earlier awards were quite discursive but the lists became less descriptive, replaced by a simple schedule, as the process gathered momentum. Before listing the allotments of land to individual landowners it became customary to list the allotment of roads and footpaths, and other special categories, generally the Trustees of continuing common land including public utilities such as sand or gravel pits and watering places. The list of allotments to the individual claimants then followed, giving the acreage and descriptions of boundaries, and identifying responsibilities for hedging or walling. The plots are therefore not arranged in number order in the award but under type or name of claimant, which makes it time-consuming to find the text for any individual plot. The schedule of allotments was usually accompanied by maps of the plots being enclosed, but in some of the earlier awards the process was carried out entirely by description which makes identification of the areas involved difficult.

Staffordshire Record Office also holds some documents relating to earlier enclosure, mostly for the 17th and 18th centuries, but with a few relating to earlier centuries. Some of these may merely contain references to the fact that an enclosure had taken place or to the consolidation of an estate, but there are some agreements and deeds of exchanges, and a few surveys or plans. Some of the Parliamentary enclosure maps also indicate "old inclosed lands" so may be helpful for the study of this period of the process. This Guide only lists documents from the period of Parliamentary enclosure. There can also be further subsidiary documents which may not be listed in this Guide, particularly when a landed estate was closely involved in the process or where there may have been much negotiation between the parties and the Commissioners.

Identification of places and arrangement of the Guide

As many of the areas subject to enclosure are identified by the manor or liberty in which they fell, rather than by ancient parish area, it is not always easy to clarify their precise location. Names of individual fields or commons have been added where possible to assist this identification. These have been taken from the Acts, where itemised in the title or preamble, or from the maps, but in some cases no further detail has been identified. This Guide is arranged alphabetically by ancient parish and extra parochial area. There are also additional entries for Needwood Forest and Cannock Chase which both have substantial documentation, but those parishes included in those awards are also separately listed under their own name.

Dating of Acts and Awards

The Acts of Parliament can pre-date the awards by some years. Where an Act is listed separately its correct date is given. Where an Act is listed with an award, it is the award date that is given. In some cases, more than one copy of the published Act is held at Staffordshire Record Office or at the William Salt Library. Every known copy of each Act should appear in this list but not every copy will be easy to handle or suitable for copying.

Access and copying

The Staffordshire enclosure maps have been digitised. These are gradually being placed on the website www.staffspasttrack.org.uk to be viewed free of charge (zoomable watermarked images). Digital copies of individual maps on compact disk can also be purchased on request. Where there are two copies of a map, only one has been copied, usually the deposited copy. Due to their size and complexity, the enclosure awards have not been digitised, nor the Acts of Parliament, and they need to be viewed in person at Staffordshire Record Office. During the temporary closure of the Record Office 2022-2024 access is being provided for urgent and legal enquiries.
